Dissertation: "Psycho-Social Ethnography of the Commonplace," which has its roots in feminist standpoint epistemology. Using this methodology, I intend to assess young women's experiences of day to day life in Canadian university residences. For instance, I will look at alcohol use, sexual health and sexual behavior, eating behaviors, relationships, and the experience of minority groups (e.g., students from various ethnicities, LGB groups). It is my intention to later expand this research to women living in similar university residential systems, such as those in the United Kingdom, and to some extent, those in the United States.
